1. Questions about process.

*How do you feel about the other group now that the hearing is over? Were they good listeners? Were they reasonable?

*What emotions did you feel during the film and the hearing? Why do you think this happened?

*What were the biggest points of difference between the two groups? Was it hard to find points of agreement?

2. Questions about cultural values.

*What cultural values were used by each group to support its side?

*What values were NOT shared by both cultural communities? What values were shared? Did any values appear on the surface to be shared, but left you wondering if they really were? Why?

*What were the most important values in the role-played communities? How do these compare with your own values? How might values be put into practice in different ways by different groups (i.e. can “be respectful” be put into practice in different ways)?

3. Questions about ethnocentrism.

*In what ways did being part of a side or group change the way you saw the film or different argument presented during the hearing? Who is right in this conflict? Why?

*Have you ever been part of a group that was misunderstood and misrepresented? How did you feel about that? What could be done to correct this?

*Ethnocentrism involves seeing our group’s standards as the correct ones. What examples of ethnocentrism did you see during the hearing? How are ethnocentrism and emotion tied together?

*If you disagree with the side you were assigned to represent, was it difficult play your part well? Explain?

4. Questions about intercultural conflict management.

*What different conflict styles did people use during the hearing? Which of these were effective in your mind? Why?

*To what extent did the groups see this conflict as a zero-sum game? Would it be possible to have a win-win result in a conflict like this? Who would decide what counted as winning for each side?

*Which emotions were primary in this conflict? Emotions are an inevitable and good part of life. How can we use emotion appropriately in times of conflict?

*What strategies would best help with resolving this conflict?

*What are other real world examples of intercultural conflict? What are the key cultural differences involved in these examples? How are people seeing only one side? Can people be true to their beliefs and still be open to multiple perspectives?
