This class will be a workshop for the development of philosophical projects which somehow pull together the learning and interests of students reaching the end of their undergraduate major in philosophy. The course will be tailored to fit the particular interests of the enrolled students. We will read varied philosophical essays that pertain to students' projects and discuss students' works in various stages of development. Students' final grades will be determined by the work they produce, as well as their assistance in other students' projects.

Contact information: Charlie Huenemann, charlie.huenemann@usu.edu, Main 208, office hours Wednesday 1-3, but also by appointment.

This is a workshop class, and assignments are made depending on what stage everyone is in their project development. The final grade is determined by the quality of the resulting project, the helpfulness of the student in the workshop setting, and the seriousness of purpose of the student.